

ABSTRACT

Disclosed are methods and systems useful in connection with medical testing systems. A user initiates an inquiry to a facility equipped to receive such inquiries. The facility routes the inquiry based on various parameters, such as whether the user's identification code is associated with a code lot. The facility may perform various associations between the user's test result information and other information, such as risk assessment information.